He Loves You Until You Sit Down to Eat

taurant say to another, "This beautiful blonde walked in and she was really a good looker. But then she sat down and started eating. What an ugly sight she was.'

I was intrigued. What, in the American male's opinion, did he find objectionable about a womans' eating habits?

One man said he found most objectionable the way some women shovel food into the mouth as though they were loading a boiler full of coal, talking all the while.

Another said he couldn't stand the indecision of a woman when she was ordering in a restaurant. She had to know what everything was, then changed her mind several times before finally making the big decision.

One man said he always dreaded the type of woman who insisted on tasting everyone else's food, reaching far across the table with her fork to jab away at each dish, making personal remarks about the food.

Leaving the spoon in the cup while drinking coffee is an unpardonable sin as far as one man is concerned. Another dislikes chain-smoking women, the horror who lights cigarettes between courses, leaving them to billow smoke over the table while they burn themselves out. Making loud noises while eating, such as smacking the lips, was enough for one man to scratch your name from his date

Getting overly friendly with the waiter is a personal dislike of one gentleman. He thinks it's in bad taste and unfeminine. It is. In fact, the woman should never talk to the waiter.

This is my pet dislike, and particularly applicable to you American women. You have a bad habit of ordering directly from the waiter instead of giving the order to your escort, who in turn gives it to the waiter. A breach of this etiquette in my eye is unforgivable.

Manners are not born to anyone. They come to you through practice and knowledge and more practice.

Apply them and you are a delight to entertain, a bigger delight across the dinner table and a joy to behold across the breakfast table. See for yourself.
